

I would just like to comment on the potential for the FCC to be pressured into controlling the content that XM satellite radio provides. As a long-distance traveler, I find it to have become an almost invaluable tool to be able to know where I can look for major city traffic information while in some of America's major cities.

My XM radio started out as a fun toy for the car, but with these new channels they've really become much more than that. Please reject the petition by the National Association of Broadcasters to try and take away even more choice from the public airwaves. They already destroyed broadcast radio, please don't let them ruin this.
